Why did Lebanon's power plants shut down?

BEIRUT -- Lebanon's two main power plants were forced to shut down after running out of fuel, the state electricity company said Saturday, leaving the small country with no government-produced power. Lebanon is grappling with a crippling energy crisis made worse by its dependency on fuel imports.

Why has Lebanon been left without electricity?

Lebanon has been left without electricity, plunging the country into darkness amid a severe economic crisis. A government official told Reuters news agency the country's two largest power stations, Deir Ammar and Zahrani, had shut down because of a fuel shortage.

What happened to electricity in Lebanon?

Along with Israel blockading the Lebanese coast, it led to the near exhaustion of fuel supplies. State electricity in Lebanon is available for a maximum of around four hours a day. Those who can afford it rely on expensive diesel-powered private generators to fill the gap, although very few provide power for 24 hours.

What happened to EPA power plant in Lebanon?

EPA Lebanon's state electricity company (EDL) announced on Saturday that it could no longer supply power after its last operational power plant exhausted its fuel reserves. The company said the situation would affect "essential facilities such as the airport, port, water pumps, sewage systems, and prisons."

How much power does Lebanon need?

The current proposal sees it being sent to a power plant in northern Lebanon and generating about 450 megawatts of power. "Lebanon needs around 3600 megawatts," Kaissy said. "We are currently producing 700 megawatts. So it would be substantial." Those 700 megawatts translate to about two to three hours of power a day across the country.

Why is Lebanon struggling to provide enough power to its people?

Lebanon has long struggled to provide enough power to its people, but the problem has been exacerbated by an economic crisis that began in 2019. Lebanon, which has few natural resources, imports heavy fuel oil from Iraq under a swap deal signed in 2021.
